Using data from 2020, MN-ADDM researchers found 1 in 34 (3.0%) 8-year-old children were identified with ASD. This is comparable to the overall ADDM Network prevalence of 8-year-old children identified with ASD (1 in 36 or 2.8%) in the United States where the CDC tracked ASD in 2020. Males were 4.3 times more likely to be identified with ASD than females. The average age of first ASD diagnosis was 4 years, 11 months.

Using data from 2020, MN-ADDM researchers found 1 in 53 (1.9%) 4-year-old children were identified with ASD. This is lower than the overall ADDM Network prevalence of 4-year-old children identified with ASD (1 in 46 or 2.2%) in the United States where the CDC tracked ASD in 2020. Males were 4.1 times more likely to be identified with ASD than females.
